Bailey Adamo 69-4

As Bailey Motorhome Ambassadors Becki Biggins and her partner, your Club magazine columnist Andy Torbet, received one of the first of the new Adamo motorhomes towards the end of last year. Becki gives us the details

I was lucky enough, between lockdowns, to squeeze in a grown-up weekend in Oxford. No kids, just me, my partner Andy and some serious luxury in the form of Bailey's new Adamo 69-4 motorhome.

Bailey is moving towards a more Euro style in the Adamo range - think external garages, modular travel seats and flexible living space - but it's incorporated British favourites such as a cooker with oven and separate grill, a large tower fridge freezer and, vital for us, a Truma Combi 4 heating system. Perfect for a drizzly weekend in October.

The new Adamo range boasts three layouts - the 75-4I with its island bed, the 75-4DL, with two living spaces and this, the 69-4, with room for four people to both travel and sleep.

Brighter days

The living space feels roomy and light, thanks to an abundance of tastefully-furnished windows, a vast skylight, ceiling lights and reading lights with integrated USB charging sockets. The backrests to the two forward-facing travel seats can be adjusted for rake and also fold down and become the seat bases to a pair of facing sofas in the front lounge. The cab seats swivel to complete a living room with enough space for six people. A slide-out TV bracket is fitted as standard and all three layouts in the range boast a pedestal table that raises and lowers electrically, with a fold-out table top that also rotates. No more having to retrieve your table from a cupboard.

Eating in

The kitchen feels remarkably spacious, with a three-burner gas hob with an electric hotplate, oven with separate grill, plenty of storage and a whopping 142-litre tower fridge, complete with ice box because, let's face it, who wants a warm gin and tonic?

The work surface is deep, easily incorporating a larger sink than the one I'm used to in a motorhome. There's an option to install a microwave in one of the overhead cupboards.

And so to bed

The living area converts into a sleeping area for up to four people and features an electrically-operated drop-down bed, of which I'm a big fan. I hate faffing with bedding at the end of an active day.

With the Adamo's new three-position drop-down bed, all I have to remove are the pillows and when it's dropped down to its lowest position - which involves removing the backrests from the lower sofas - it's simple to climb into without have to use a ladder. My bed (a generous 1.6m x 1.9m or 5ft 3in x 6ft 3in), perfectly made that morning, is in place in seconds. There's also the option to convert the sofas into another double bed for guests with the bed pack included.

Keeping clean

To say the washroom is big is an understatement. I'd describe it as a dressing room with a shower. It houses not only the wash basin and toilet, but also a huge cupboard with hanging rail, easily big enough for my whole family's clothes. It also has a sliding door to the external garage, meaning on those drizzly days you don't have to go outside to access your kit.

From the outside

For me, the garages are a standout feature of the Adamo range. They all have 230V and 12V sockets, plus a heating outlet, a drainage hole, and the 69-4 even has a rail with full-length hanging space. It's perfect for storing kit, drying clothes and it makes a great doggy-bedroom, if you need one. Outside there's even a lead lashing-point to keep your pooch secure while you're on the campsite or parked at the beach.

Externally a TV aerial, on-board storage for two 11kg gas bottles and an 80kW solar panel all come as standard.

On the road

A 160bhp Ford engine, automatic gearbox, rear camera, cruise control and air conditioning (all as standard) make this motorhome very easy and comfortable to drive. It's Bailey's first Ford motorhome and like its other motorhomes has gone through Bailey's crash test programme. And at 3,500kg maximum mass it can be driven on a regular UK B-class driving licence.

Verdict

A great motorhome for an adventurous pair (and a furry friend), yet it easily adapts to house up to four in luxury. ⚡
